

No. 1

Background: It is reported that six college students who share a dormitory have hired a cleaner to do laundry and clean the room once a week. Each of them pays the cleaner 60 yuan a month.

Our Question: Is it appropriate for college students to hire a cleaner to do their laundry and clean their dormitory?

Pro: I think it is appropriate for college students to hire a cleaner to do their laundry and clean their dormitory.

Con: I don't think it is appropriate for college students to hire a cleaner to do their laundry and clean their dormitory.

No. 2

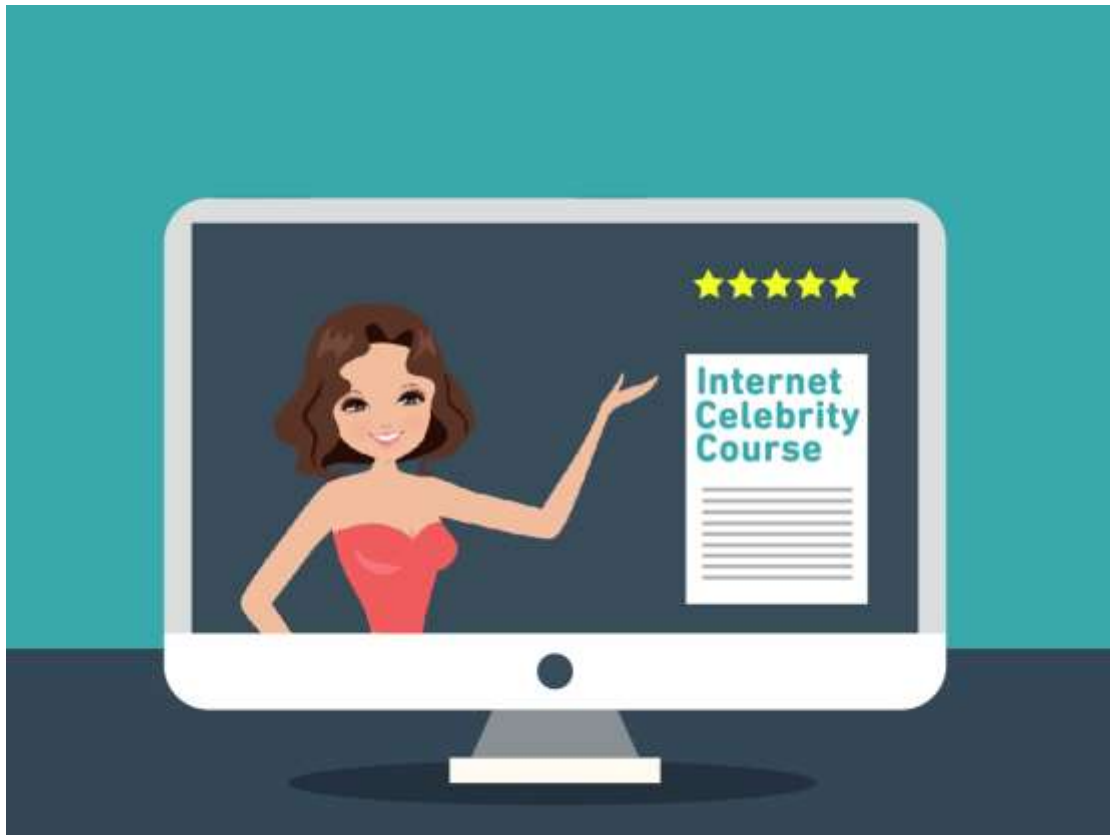

Background: One university in China is reiterating (重申) its rule that students are required to pass a swimming test to get a diploma. According to a survey by the university's Physical Education department, almost half of the freshmen cannot swim.

Our Question: Should a certain sport be compulsory for university students to get a diploma?

Pro: I think a certain sport should be compulsory for university students to get a diploma.

Con: I don't think a certain sport should be compulsory for university students to get a diploma.

No. 3

Background: A college in southwest China has offered an “Internet Celebrity” (网红) course for students who want to be live-streaming stars. The course is designed to teach students about how to present themselves online to attract viewers and translate fame into profit.

Our Question: Is it appropriate for colleges to offer a course on how to become an online celebrity?

Pro: I think it is appropriate for colleges to offer a course on how to become an online celebrity.

Con: I don't think it is appropriate for colleges to offer a course on how to become an online celebrity.

No. 4

Background: Most Chinese primary schools make it a practice of having parents sign off on the homework of their children and help supervise their studies. A primary school in Jinhua, Zhejiang province has recently announced it no longer requires parents to sign off on their children's homework.

Our Question: Is it appropriate to require parents to sign off on their children's homework?

Pro: I think it is appropriate to require parents to sign off on their children's homework.

Con: I don't think it is appropriate to require parents to sign off on their children's homework.